Stroke in blunt carotid and vertebral arterial injuries can lead to devastating neurologic sequelae in children. We describe the case of a child with a blunt carotid/subclavian injury, who was initially treated with stent placement and angiographic embolization. His injuries resolved but he later demonstrated worsening neurologic symptoms. A repeat endovascular intervention was performed successfully in which he received microcoils and an angiographic stent-assisted coiling technique to treat a pseudoaneurysm near his internal carotid artery bifurcation. This case highlights a novel technique that involved the endovascular deployment of microcoils for the closure of pseudoaneurysms.. Particle tracing {#sec020} ----- For each structure in the 3D EM dataset, we traced particles with the Spots software \[@pbi.1007250.ref050]\]. The software has two components, a 2D detector and a 3D reconstruction engine. The 2D detector locates the particles in a grid of regular bins. For each particle bin, the reconstruction engine builds a 3D reconstruction starting from the edge of the bin, while rejecting the remaining volume. We processed each bin individually and cut the resulting 3D reconstruction at the beginning and end of the bin. The cut volumes were combined to form a single 3D reconstruction of the bin. We then applied the 3D reconstruction engine to the segmented nanowires, from which the vesicles could be automatically detected. In order to remove false-positive particles, we discarded the particles traced on the thin and abnormally shaped sections. Finally, we aligned and averaged the segmented particles. Data access
