I have set up BitLocker drive encryption with a recovery key I bought through Dell. I have not yet set up the machine to use this recovery key. I wanted to give it a try to see if I can find it on the drive already. The problem is that the recovery key is not there (it's supposed to be on the first 4 partitions of the drive). If I connect the drive to another notebook and open it, BitLocker prompts me for the recovery key, and it can be easily found and entered. If I boot off of a USB stick, I can enter the encryption key the moment the machine is running. However, BitLocker can't seem to read the recovery key without me powering down the system and plugging in the drive. The only way to enter the recovery key for the drive encryption (if it's even possible) is if I switch to the Dell Lite mode on the encrypted drive. However, I don't want to use the Dell Lite mode. Why can I not enter the recovery key for BitLocker through a live system? A: On the new Dell XPS 13 that I'm using, it's possible to unlock the drive without switching to the Lite mode. This may be a new feature that I'm not familiar with. 3e33713323
