What's New in the Cactus Editor?

Cactus Editor is an HTML Editor to help you with the editing of basic HTML files. It was written by DelegatesN from Haiku OS. The editor has one window which is split into two parts. The left part is for the HTML, and the right part is for the preview. Features: Editing: You can edit HTML files using Cactus Editor. You can add and remove tags, and change the text inside a tag. The edit mode is very similar to a word processor. Previewing: You can preview the HTML file you are editing inside the preview window. It's a text area, where you can see the HTML code, and highlight specific portions of the code, and of course, change the text. External Functions: You can add external functions to your HTML file. These functions will be executed when the file is opened for editing, and will be shown in the HTML area. Some people may think that this feature is not so useful, since you can just as well add functions in the editor's own function area. It's not that simple. Think of this editor as a way to generate functions from a .html file. User Interface: You can change the appearance of the interface to suit your needs. Requirements: You must have Haiku installed and running before you install and run Cactus Editor. The installer will install everything you need. Installation: The install procedure is the same as with most of the software provided by Haiku. The installers put all the needed files in the correct folders. The installers will remove the previous version of Cactus Editor, if you install a new version. You should only install one version of Cactus Editor. Notes: Don't forget to go to Settings to give the app your "permission to save changes" in case you want to save the file after you change it. Copyright: Cactus Editor is free software. It comes without any warranty. I've used a small bit of code from some other software, so the licenses of that code are attached. You may use the code as you wish, and change the license. The GPLv3, the GNU General Public License version 3. The code itself is licensed under the GPLv3 license. Trac: If you want to track the development, there's a track I think in my FTP. A new epidemic of idiopathic, reversible blindness in infants and young children.
