Cleveland Cavaliers general manager Koby Altman said Monday that the team has an interest in trading for the No. 1 overall pick in next week's NBA draft. The Cavs are expected to trade the top overall pick in a deal to land Boston Celtics star Isaiah Thomas, league sources told ESPN. Thomas has several weeks before the trade deadline to decide on whether he's going to opt-out of the final year of his contract with the Celtics. After Thomas cleared waivers, the Celtics can add him without having to pay the Cavs' trade exception, which they can use to swap No. 1 and No. 13. A source told ESPN that the Cavs and Celtics are trying to reach an agreement on the future of Thomas, which could be for the remainder of the season or an extension. The trade exception Cleveland has to use will go into effect for the second time this season if a deal is done for Thomas. The Cavs used the trade exception to acquire Jeff Green from the Atlanta Hawks on Jan. 14 -- the same day as Kevin Love's injury -- after Thomas was cleared from trade limbo by the Celtics. Altman said the Celtics are "still in the market" for a point guard. The No. 1 pick will be between the Boston Celtics' Kyrie Irving, Boston's own Terry Rozier, Oklahoma City's Russell Westbrook or Milwaukee's Gian
