Is it possible to have a model define a custom JavaScript function to be used by the forEach element in the Javascript loop that renders a template? A simplified version of my models looks like this: var PlanModel = Backbone.Model.extend({ defaultRender: function(){ console.log("PlanModel rendering"); } }); var Plans = Backbone.Collection.extend({ model: PlanModel, url: "/api/plans", defaultRender: function(){ return this.map(function(plan) { console.log("Plan rendering"); return "" + plan.name + ""; }) } }); Then in my backbone controller: var Controller = Backbone.Controller.extend({ initialize: function(){ this.plans = new Plans(); }, plans: function(){ this.plans.fetch(); }, render: function(){ var plans = this.plans; plans.each(function(plan){ console.log("Plan "+plan.name+" in

It's like it's reading from the file position on the disk. Can you think of a reason for that? I am using the Byte[] for file data retrieval. I tried parsing through the file and I couldn't find any location where the position was changed. I just thought this is weird and I'd like to know more about it. I'm using.Net Framework Version 4. A: It is a "feature" of.NET. See (Although, apparently, not all kinds of streams are affected. Only ones used for interoperability with binary data. The "files" stream, as an example.) That being said, if this really is the data you need to read, you can "fix" it by setting the Position property of the StreamReader object that reads the byte array. See also: Completely to the point.It is a fact that ISIS fighters and the Nazis, and Russian and American imperialists as well as many other dictators, needed to destroy mosques and mosques needed to be destroyed. In the Middle Ages, mosques and churches were the great educational and cultural centers of the cities and villages, where kings, princes, pastors, and barons, clerics, preachers, historians, and many others met to discuss and to talk politics, science, theology, and the arts. The Sufi shaikhs inspired the masses by their works of wisdom, forgiveness, piety, and love, and in their communities the true values of love, forgiveness, and peace reigned. The destruction of mosques in Northern Africa and Iraq is not Islam at work, as both Sunni and Shiite extremist groups target all religious sites. There are beheadings and killings in the name of Allah everywhere. It is also true that many of these men and women do NOT believe in the cruel interpretation of Islam forced upon them by such men as the Taliban and the ayatollahs. Today, to worship at a mosque is to engage in the worst of crimes: to live dangerously. This is the "Islam" that the religious radicals are imposing on the nations of the Middle East and the world.
