The intention is to fill the gap that exists between approximately 8000 points and 26000 points, in the middle of the market. There are around 1500 different troops and 5000 different troops that we release in different sizes at approximately 2000 points. So we decided to hit the middle and produce a game that is mostly between 6000 and 9000 points based on the figures that are in the market and worked out perfectly together so there would be no long term production of figures. A window period is provided following which the game can only be played. There is quite a lot planned for when the game should reach the general public. A little bit about the product development history: The first version of the game consisted of 200 miniatures. The smallest figures were 30mm and the largest were 60mm. At the time that was expected to get a steady sales, so the development team focused on producing 100 miniatures per figure as the main deliverable. When the game was launched, there were only two battalions to choose from, with the introduction of the first figure of the Dark Ages few weeks later It was an inexpensive product, but in its initial release it was a perfect failure. The customers were not happy about the price and made no order. Some three to four years passed. We thought there might be some customers that would eventually prefer a game with a smaller price, and decided it would be an intelligent thing to produce a bigger game with a lower price, taking out the miniatures and leaving only the battalions. The quality of the miniatures production had improved, and the composition of the terrain was an area of debate as the first version relied on the included terrain. The game mechanics were also changed so it would not depend on fixing the terrain or drawing the scenarios out, the whole effect was more favorable, we planned a
