The kinetic behavior of human liver alcohol dehydrogenase (HADH), at pH 8.0 in the presence of the coenzyme NAD⁺ and varying concentrations of acetonitrile, has been studied using stopped-flow kinetics and equilibrium measurements. From the data obtained, activation parameters for the oligomer-to-tetramer transition have been determined. These findings, taken in conjunction with those from the analogous studies of bovine liver alcohol dehydrogenase, provide the first experimental determination of the species distribution of the reacting enzyme species in a homogeneous reaction medium and in near thermodynamic equilibrium. Q: How to set Nunit 3.0.2 to not close opened browser windows? I am currently using Nunit 2.6.3 and Nunit 3.0.2 and it is closing the browser window immediately when starting a test execution. When using Nunit 2.6.3, there were tasks in Visual Studio to set the settings and I am not aware of any such setting for Nunit 3.0.2. I am still able to open the browser manually after running the test execution. Ideas? A: If by "my tests execute" you mean "my tests run", then it is by design. Unit tests should always be run in isolation, with minimal changes to your system. It is not at all unusual for browsers to want to load extra resources in order to run the tests. This load should be done when the tests are ran, but not when they are run. Simply open the browser after the tests run, or add the browser to the AppDomain. That said, I would still change your tests to not run in a browser. The increasing popularity of miniaturized electronic devices
