URL: I saw this video of an eagle swooping down and grabbing a fish in the air by the tail, something clicked in my mind. Ever since I saw this video I have been thinking and staring at the image: what if they have learned how to target small prey, on the water, and dive with just enough room to crack it open and pick the fish out?? While still in the water they would have to knock the water off the fish and catch it off the water to move it off the pier, but on the land they can easily target the small prey, and catch it off the beach. It just clicked in my mind that they could learn to do this once they master slingshots and bow and arrows, using the bow to release their target for the capture. Like the vast majority of our food, the fish you eat today were caught by someone else, at some point. When we fish, we simply want to start our own tradition and give back to the earth what they have been giving to us in abundance for generations. Today I caught a fish while doing a Upland Safari with my
