Phosphatidylinositol-3-kinase inhibition does not prevent Fas-mediated cell death: a role for cathepsins and the vacuolar H(+)-ATPase. The vacuolar H(+)-ATPase (V-ATPase) plays a significant role in maintaining pH of the endosomal/lysosomal compartment. Studies in our laboratory have shown that inhibition of V-ATPase activity potentiates Fas-mediated cytotoxicity in the murine T-cell line, CEM-C7. Thus, it was of interest to determine whether death signals such as Fas activating signals could be transduced by V-ATPase activity. Here we show that treatment of the murine T-cell line, CEM-C7, with Fas-activating antibodies did not inhibit V-ATPase activity. The absence of a relationship between cell death and V-ATPase activity was confirmed by demonstrating that V-ATPase inhibition did not potentiate anergy or clonal deletion. Furthermore, V-ATPase inhibition was not cytotoxic and cell death that occurs following Fas-mediated cell death is not V-ATPase dependent. Finally, our data show that the death signal leading to cell death is not dependent on cathepsin-type cysteine proteases. Moderator: I've got my line.
