I'm running some queries on a website that have the following tag: But, when I pass this value from a form, I have a problem. When the form is submitted, the data goes to the database with quotations marks, and looks like this: data="Andrea Garza" The data entered by the form is sent to the database, and the value gets echoed into the PHP page, When I check the value from the database: $garzatag = "Andrea Garza" Works perfectly. The problem is when I put this value in the HTML of a form: When I submit the form, the text appears fine on the HTML page, but when I check the value from the database, all the quotes marks are back again. So my question is, how can I get the magic_quotes_gpc and session_register_shutdown function to work together? How can I get the magic_quotes_gpc to work with forms, and session_register_shutdown to be saved into the database? A: You could wrap your variable in double quotes: (You should remove the echo of this if it's output to a template file. The variable should be assigned to a variable in the template file and then output, not output directly.) Q
