FULL Natura Sound Therapy 3 Reg Key !!EXCLUSIVE!!

To monitor the influence of the background sounds on the tinnitus loudness and annoyance over time, a daily diary was used. To motivate the patients to record their tinnitus, the influence of background sound on daily life was explained. Participants were asked to record their tinnitus loudness and annoyance (VAS scores from 0 (not at all) to 10 (extremely)) on a paper form once a day, before going to sleep. TFI was completed after the first and second week. A clinically relevant reduction in loudness and annoyance is characterised by a decrease of 13 points or more. (Meikle et al. 2012 ). To meet the aims of the study, the study population was selected from two different clinics in The Netherlands: Zuyderland University Medical Center in Heerlen and Deventer General Hospital in Deventer. Both clinics have fulfilled the requirements of a formal approval as a clinical test site by the Dutch Health Care Inspectorate (MOBIVON) and are certified to test and provide implants with the Nucleus™ 6 sound processor or other implants and hearing aids. All patients were implanted with the Nucleus™ 6. Patients were recruited if they had received a diagnosis of unilateral or bilateral CI using the Nucleus™ 6 with CART sound processing after more than six months post-implantation, if they were at least 18 years old, and had had at least minimal practical experience with the sound processing of Nucleus™ 6 sound processor on a daily basis. Exclusion criteria for the study were any contraindications for sound therapy such as, but not limited to, hearing aids, hearing loss which would prevent the use of background sound, and spatial auditory deprivation. However, the presence of noisy environments in daily life was not an exclusion criterion. Patients were also excluded from the study if the Nucleus™ 6 processor was replaced or had failed. Furthermore, the presence of signs of a severe and/or inappropriate reaction towards the sound therapy in relation to the implantation process, or the presence of a significant language barrier, were exclusion criteria. A list of eligible patients was provided to both clinics for the purpose of a recruitment procedure.
