
Zameer The Fire Within _HOT_ Full Movies 720p

in other subjects, researchers have reported studying the effect of cannabis on the brain for several years, from a researchers understanding of how the drug works to gaining approval from the regulatory bodies that rule on medical marijuana. when researchers administered a single dose of cannabinoids, their memory improved or stayed the same in 30 to 40 percent of people, no matter what age they were. her findings not only indicate that marijuana could reverse symptoms of dementia, but it could also help people suffering from it, considering the research thats already been done on cbd, how many other drugs will be available to patients in the next five years? ironically, the answer is about to become very clear, now that cbd is still technically illegal in the first part of the study, researchers gave dried cbd to people with mild to moderate cases of dementia. they put one group of patients on what is known as a low dose of the drug and the other on what is called a high dose of cbd. to be clear, neither group was given a high dose of thc. the study excluded patients with severe symptoms of dementia, and patients who smoked marijuana on a regular basis. results showed that both cbd and the improved learning and memory in the older adults. younger adults taking a higher dose of thc improved their learning ability, too, proving that the drug has a positive effect on the brains of even younger people. for the second part of the study, researchers conducted a randomized trial on the effects of cbd on people who were experiencing the early stages of dementia. as mentioned above, the doses were higher, up to 5 times as strong as the first study, and more patients were studied. results varied in the group as well, but overall, they found that cbd could improve learning and memory in people with early stages of dementia.
